

A New Series from Fordham University Press

Medieval Philosophy

Texts and Studies

Editorial Board:

Gyula Klima

Editor, Fordham University

Richard Cross

Oxford University

Brian Davies

Fordham University

Peter King

University of Toronto

Brian Leftow

Oxford University

John Marenbon

Cambridge University

Giorgio Pini

Fordham University

Robert Pasnau

University of Colorado

Richard Taylor

Marquette University

Jack Zupko

Emory University

Focusing on the rich tradition of medieval philosophy, this series will publish single-author books, multi-author collections, commentaries, translations, and bilingual and original critical texts. It will cover the full range of philosophical disciplines as medieval authors addressed them: logic, epistemology, philosophy of nature, philosophy of the soul, metaphysics, moral philosophy, and political philosophy. Volumes in the series will be especially concerned to trace both the distinctive conceptual cohesion and the immense diversity to be found in medieval philosophical thinking. As well as exploring its impact on early modern thought, they will consider how it can directly enhance our contemporary understanding of fundamental philosophical questions. The series, therefore, will be of interest not only to specialists in medieval philosophy but also to contemporary philosophers working in any major field, as well as to anyone in the humanities interested in a historically informed philosophical view of his or her subject. Volumes in the series should provide excellent course adoptions for graduate teaching and research.

For submission procedures see the Fordham University Press Website at www.fordhampress.com.
Queries and proposals can also be sent to the series editor at klima@fordham.edu.