The Orthodox Christian Studies Center at Fordham University

Celebrating 10 Years of Scholarship and Community
“One of the things that I like about the Center and the way it approaches theology ... is that they do so with a certain boldness [that] speaks to the fact that Orthodoxy is not something which is isolated; it is not something which is frozen in time, but it’s indeed a very living, viable study of Orthodox Christianity.”

—His Grace the Right Reverend Irinej Dobrijević, Serbian Orthodox Bishop of Eastern America
A Vibrant Community

Advancing scholarship and public discourse on the history, thought, and culture of the Orthodox Christian world

The Orthodox Christian Studies Center is unique in all the world. As part of a Jesuit, Catholic research university in New York City, we are prominently positioned to engage students, faculty, and the global community in our mission: to explore and preserve Orthodox Christianity through bold inquiry, cutting-edge scholarship, and supportive fellowship.

Fordham has long had a special relationship with Orthodox Christian communities—from the 1960s, when the Very Rev. John Meyendorff brought his ecumenical vision to the Fordham faculty; to 2009, when His All Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew preached in the University Church; to 2012, when the University’s Orthodox Christian studies program, founded in 2007, blossomed into the Orthodox Christian Studies Center.

Over the past 10 years, our influence has grown tremendously thanks to the generous support of foundations and individuals who recognize the value of our work and community.

Today, we offer the only Orthodox Christian studies minor for undergraduates in the United States. Our fellowships fund award-winning research. Our virtual and in-person events engage thousands of people. And our thriving community initiates critical dialogue on issues of vital importance, from human rights and environmentalism to nationalism and war.

As we mark our 10th anniversary, we reflect on our roots, our growth, and where we are headed. With continued support from scholars and patrons like you, we will deepen our commitment to communicating the value and relevance of a vibrant Orthodox Christian tradition well into the future.
Building a Diverse Community of Faith and Scholarship

As I reflect on the Center’s 10th anniversary, I am most struck by and thankful for the many layers of community that we have formed—with students, faculty, parents, and donors, and with academic, ecclesial, and public audiences beyond Fordham.

Through courses sponsored by the Center, more than 3,000 Fordham undergraduates from multiple religious backgrounds and a range of academic paths have been brought together through shared study of the art, architecture, history, literature, philosophy, and theology of Orthodox Christianity. These students have broadened their perspectives about diversity within Christianity, and they have come to understand how the Orthodox Christian experience continues to shape culture today in the Middle East, the Balkans, Russia, and elsewhere.

Because the Center serves as a bridge between Christian communities (Orthodox and Catholic, Chalcedonian and non-Chalcedonian), it has fostered conversation and community among Orthodox students of diverse backgrounds—Coptic, Armenian, Serbian, Greek, and Russian, to name a few. Together at a Jesuit, Catholic university, they have learned with and from students from a host of Western Christian traditions, especially Roman Catholicism.

When we established the Center in 2012, we formed the Orthodox Christian Studies Advisory Council to help us discern how we might be of the greatest service to our students, the church, and the broader public. The council comprises women and men from both Orthodox and Roman Catholic backgrounds; some are Fordham alumni and parents of Fordham students, but most are not.

The council’s strength lies in its diversity, and in many ways, this group of dedicated individuals is a microcosm of the broader appeal of the Center. Some are drawn to our ecumenical work, others by the way we provide needed resources for the church community; some are excited by the Center’s appeal to younger generations, others by the way we raise the profile of Orthodox Christianity in the broader culture. What unites all council members, however, is a strong belief that the Center’s various academic and public initiatives build upon one another for a greater good.

—George E. Demacopoulos, Ph.D.
Co-Director, Orthodox Christian Studies Center
Professor of Historical Theology
Fr. John Meyendorff & Patterson Family Chair of Orthodox Christian Studies

“Dr. Demacopoulos and Dr. Papanikolaou’s herculean efforts and accomplishments have elevated Eastern Orthodoxy’s standing within academia and provided an insightful voice towards fruitful dialogue that unites us as Christians. The Center fulfills St. Paul’s admonition: ‘Strive for full restoration, encourage one another, be of one mind, live in peace. And the God of love and peace will be with you.’ ”

(2 Corinthians 13:11)

—Drake Behrakis, Orthodox Christian Studies Advisory Council Member Emeritus

“Dr. Behrakis’s herculean efforts and accomplishments have elevated Eastern Orthodoxy’s standing within academia and provided an insightful voice towards fruitful dialogue that unites us as Christians. The Center fulfills St. Paul’s admonition: ‘Strive for full restoration, encourage one another, be of one mind, live in peace. And the God of love and peace will be with you.’ ”

(2 Corinthians 13:11)
As an undergraduate at Fordham during the 1980s, I learned valuable lessons from my mentors at the University: Fr. John Meyendorff, a towering Orthodox presence on campus who embodied ecumenical openness; and Mrs. Stella Moundas, director of the Office of the President for more than four decades, who opened her home to Fordham’s Orthodox students and initiated connections between the Fordham leadership and the Greek community.

My experiences with Fr. John and Stella are still an inspiration to me and help shape the Center’s work to this day. Through their teachings, I see the fruits of nurturing a community of scholars, laity, clergy, and individuals across Orthodox jurisdictional and ecclesial boundaries.

To build a worshiping community means to create a space that is trusted and diverse, where people can engage in open dialogue while remaining faithful to our Orthodox tradition. The Center’s ongoing commitment to community through discourse with one another and our faith has led us to create multiple venues for intellectual inquiry.

Through initiatives such as the Journal of Orthodox Christian Studies, the Orthodox Christianity and Contemporary Thought book series, Public Orthodoxy, and the world’s only fellowships specifically devoted to Orthodox Christian studies, Coptic Orthodox studies, and Armenian Orthodox studies, we help all people—aclerics, clergy, and lifelong learners—explore important questions about faith, gender, race, culture, and the world today.

I look forward to witnessing our worshiping community’s continued growth, as we engage the next generation of Orthodox scholars and parishioners to critically engage their faith and create trust and communion with one another.

Study and Service

At the root of the Orthodox Christian Studies Center’s growth is a pioneering commitment to supporting students, academically and spiritually, and to fostering ecumenical unity and understanding.

Undergraduate Minor in Orthodox Christian Studies

Established in 2007, the University’s thriving Orthodox Christian studies minor—the only program of its kind in the United States—predates the founding of the Center by five years. This interdisciplinary minor focuses on the faith and cultural significance of the Orthodox Christian tradition, offering insights and historical context for undergraduate students of any major.

Students pursuing the minor explore the human condition—both past and present—through a rich trove of artistic, cultural, historical, literary, philosophical, and religious resources. They learn about the connections between and among religious traditions, and gain a greater familiarity with the range of modern Orthodox cultures—from Baghdad to Moscow and beyond—that is essential in today’s global environment.

Students also tailor their minor to their interests and goals with elective courses across several disciplines, including art and music history, classics, history, modern languages and literatures, philosophy, and theology.

“I think it’s really fruitful to study Orthodox Christianity alongside art history, specifically with Byzantine artifacts. You understand both art and culture more if you understand the faith backgrounds that support it.”

—Kassandra Ibrahim, Fordham College at Rose Hill Class of 2022

3,000+ students have taken courses in Orthodox Christian studies at Fordham since 2007
Orthodox Christian Student Fellowship

Like the minor program of study, Fordham’s chapter of the Orthodox Christian Fellowship (OCF) predates the founding of the Center. It’s a student-led organization of college students from all Orthodox traditions who host liturgies on campus and meet regularly for community and support. Center co-directors George Demacopoulos and Aristotle Papanikolaou serve as faculty advisers to the group, which is supported by Fordham’s Office of Campus Ministry.

During the academic year, OCF welcomes esteemed speakers and hosts bimonthly LOGOS gatherings where students pray together, talk about the week, and try to grow together in faith. Students also engage in charitable outreach to local communities, including at Emmaus House of Harlem, a center serving homeless families.

Student Scholarships and Awards

The Susan M. Jannace Endowed Scholarship Fund was established in 2014 by William Jannace, a 1996 Fordham Law graduate and adjunct professor at the law school, to support a Fordham student minoring in Orthodox Christian studies or active in the Orthodox Christian Fellowship.

Each year, the Center also honors undergraduates with the Fr. John F. Long, S.J., Award and the Stella Moundas Award, recognizing academic excellence and personal commitment to the service of others, respectively.

Research and Fellowships

Over the past decade, the Center has advanced awareness and knowledge of Orthodox Christianity through thoughtfully considered research.

The Center has been awarded major external grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), the Henry Luce Foundation, Leadership 100, and the British Council, to name a few, allowing it to convene international cohorts of scholars, public intellectuals, journalists, and policymakers.

Through this support, the Center has provided fellowships to dozens of scholars at various stages of their careers and research. Their work has contributed to seminal understanding in the fields of Byzantine history, Orthodox Christian tradition, and contemporary geopolitical issues, as well as the full landscape of Eastern and Oriental Orthodoxy.

NEH Faculty and Research Fellowships

Since 2017, the Center has supported at least one faculty member and one dissertation candidate in Orthodox Christian studies through NEH faculty and research fellowships. These fellowships are open to scholars from all humanities disciplines whose projects focus on some aspect of the history, thought, and culture of Orthodox Christianity and contribute to fostering Orthodox Christian studies as a discipline in its own right. While in residence at the Center, participants have access to Fordham’s vibrant academic community, creating space for intellectual exchange and broadening public scholarship.

The NEH fellowship program was started through a challenge grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities and three-to-one matching support from dozens of individual donors and family foundations.

Coptic Orthodox Studies Research Fellowship

The Center’s Coptic Orthodox Studies Research Fellowship supports current faculty, independent scholars, and advanced Ph.D. candidates completing their dissertations in any humanities or social science discipline with projects that focus on some aspect of Coptic Orthodox Christianity, whether in Egypt or abroad.

The Coptic Fellowship program is funded by annual support from an anonymous donor.

A Space for Women in the Tradition

Ashley Purpura used her 2020–2021 NEH Faculty Fellowship from the Center to work on a monograph tentatively titled Patriarchal Women: (mis)Representing Gender Equality in Orthodox Christian Tradition.

“I’m not trying to recover a tradition that hasn’t been recorded, but just point to the spaces where the tradition that we have is problematic if we do theologically believe, as Orthodox Christians, that women are spiritually equal to men, made in the image and likeness of God,” said Purpura, who earned her Ph.D. from Fordham in 2014 and is currently a professor of religious studies at Purdue University. “We need to talk about gender as something central to our theological understanding.”

Armenian Orthodox Studies Distinguished Fellowship

Awarded in conjunction with the Zohrab Information Center at the Armenian Church of America (Eastern Diocese), the Postdoctoral Fellowship in Armenian Christian Studies is a two-year research fellowship, with the option for a third year of support. The fellow also serves as the director of the Zohrab Information Center.
Cutting-Edge Scholarship

The Center fosters a commitment to publishing scholarship that encourages academics and the broader public to reflect on Orthodoxy—past, present, and future. Our pioneering efforts have led to the development of book and journal series, popular public forums through which we promote inquiry and lifelong learning, and a multiyear human rights project designed to bring expertise and insights to global leaders and policymakers.

The goal is to encourage a broad, non-academic audience to reflect on Orthodox Christianity and its place in and impact on the modern world. Topics bridge the ecclesial, the academic, and the political, including issues in Ukraine and the Middle East, sexual diversity, and systemic racism.

The Journal of Orthodox Christian Studies

Since its inception in 2018, this double-blind, peer-reviewed scholarly journal has published leading scholarship on all aspects of the thought, history, society, politics, theology, and culture of Orthodox Christianity. The journal celebrates methodologically innovative approaches to both historical and contemporary topics from scholars in fields including anthropology, history, and political science.

The Orthodoxy and Human Rights Scholars Project

Through this five-year initiative started in 2019, an international group of experts from diverse backgrounds convenes to further our understanding of Orthodoxy’s relationship to human rights around the world.

Participating scholars are global authorities on theology, sociology, anthropology, and political science. Their expertise spans time periods, geographic regions, and Orthodox traditions. Together, they conduct innovative research and publish their work academically and in popular media to address questions about Orthodoxy and human rights pertinent to their own fields.

The project aims to foster greater public understanding of this important topic and to promote a more informed human rights foreign policy toward historically Orthodox countries.

Major support for this work is provided by the Henry Luce Foundation, with additional support from Leadership 100.

“Scholars are passionate about the Center because they see in it a place where they can have dialogue about what Orthodox Christianity means in the world—what it means socially, politically, and theologically—and how it’s impacted by and impacts different social structures in the United States and the world more broadly.”

Christian Arabic Texts in Translation
Book Series

Through this series, published by Fordham University Press, the Center seeks to make a rich literary heritage more widely available to English-speaking readers. Selections are drawn from Christian Arabic texts from the rise of Islam to the present and include biblical commentaries, church canons, histories and chronicles, theological and ascetic treatises, saints’ lives and sermons, liturgical documents, philosophical works, and scientific handbooks.

These books are ideal for the general population and undergraduate teaching, while accompanying introductions and notes also make the volumes useful for graduate-level research.

Growing Expertise
George E. Demacopoulos, Ph.D., joins the Fordham faculty, making the University’s theology department the only one in the U.S. with two graduates of an Orthodox seminary on its faculty. (He and Papanikolaou each earned a master’s degree from Holy Cross Greek Orthodox School of Theology in Brookline, Massachusetts.)

Promoting Orthodox Christian Fellowship
Papanikolaou and Demacopoulos begin serving as faculty advisers to the Orthodox Christian Fellowship, a student-led group that meets regularly to explore their faith and attend religious services in the Blue Chapel, a small sanctuary on the Rose Hill campus.

A Spiritual Founding Father
Orthodox Christian theologian Fr. John Meyendorff joins the Fordham faculty as a professor of Byzantine history. Over the next two decades, he publishes several books, including Living Tradition: Orthodox Witness in the Contemporary World and Vision of Unity, and lays the spiritual and academic groundwork for the growth of Orthodox Christian studies at Fordham.

A New Era
Aristotle “Telly” Papanikolaou, Ph.D., a 1988 Fordham graduate who studied with Fr. Meyendorff, joins the Fordham theology faculty.

A New Forum for Orthodoxy in America
Archbishop Demetrios, primate of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America, delivers the first Orthodoxy in America Lecture at Fordham: "The Dynamics of the Orthodox Faith in Contemporary America."

The Relics of the Saints
In late November, George Demacopoulos travels to Istanbul with Vatican officials to participate in the ceremonial return of the relics of Orthodox church fathers St. John Chrysostom and St. Gregory Nazianzen, which disappeared from Constantinople when Crusaders invaded the city in 1204. At the request of the Orthodox Church, Demacopoulos tracked the remains to St. Peter’s Basilica in Vatican City, where they had been enshrined under side altars. During a ceremony at the Vatican on November 27, Pope John Paul II presented the relics to Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew before they were transported to the Patriarchal Cathedral of St. George in Istanbul.

“My role is only a by-product of Fordham’s commitment to the Roman Catholic and Orthodox relationship,” Demacopoulos says. “Fordham has historically been a place of cooperation between [the two religions], and this sets up Fordham to be the logical foundation for further improvement.”

Building Bridges
Fordham hosts “Orthodox Readings of Augustine,” the inaugural Patterson Triennial Conference on Christian Unity, and bestows an honorary degree upon His Eminence Archbishop Demetrios, primate of the Greek Orthodox Church in America. The archbishop has worked tirelessly to heal the division that exists between the Eastern and Western churches,” says Joseph M. McShane, S.J., president of Fordham. “He is a master teacher, a teacher who yearns for, and who builds, the Kingdom with his every word and his every deed.”

Fall 2007
A Home for Orthodox Christian Studies
Fordham becomes the first U.S. university to offer a minor in Orthodox Christian studies. The program, co-directed by Demacopoulos and Papanikolaou, consists of two required courses, Byzantine Christianity and Orthodox Christian Ethics, and four electives.

October 27, 2009
The Ecumenical Spirit
His All Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, leader of the world’s Orthodox Christians, visits Fordham bearing a message of openness and reconciliation—and praise for Fordham as a global center for Orthodox–Catholic dialogue and the study of Orthodox Christianity. During a ceremony in the University Church, Fordham bestows on him an honorary Doctor of Laws degree “for his remarkable service to the world community and for the principles that he continues to uphold.” The patriarch also meets with members of the Orthodox Christian Fellowship, who present him with the “Bartholomew Rose,” a bright red rose cultivar developed by horticulturalist Robert Neil Rippetoe and registered with the American Rose Society.

November 2009
Thought Leadership
Fordham University Press publishes In the World, Yet Not of the World: Social and Global Initiatives of Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew, a collection of the patriarch’s major addresses and statements on human rights, religious tolerance, international peace, environmental protection, and more. It is the first book in the press’s Orthodox Christianity and Contemporary Thought series, which has grown to include more than 20 titles and is currently co-edited by Papanikolaou with Ashley M. Purpura, who earned her Ph.D. from Fordham in 2014.

2012
‘The Strongest Possible Endorsement’
Fordham establishes the Orthodox Christian Studies Center, which earns a prestigious challenge grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH). The $2 million endowment raised by a 3-to-1 matching grant will fund the Center’s fellowship programs. “The NEH grant is the strongest possible endorsement that the work of the Orthodox Christian Studies Center is unique, valuable, and necessary,” Papanikolaou says, “not simply for Orthodox Christianity or Catholic–Orthodox relations but for the humanities writ large.”
November 18, 2013
The First Endowed Chair
Aristotle Papaniokou is installed as the University's first Archbishop Demetrios Chair in Orthodox Theology and Culture, an endowed position made possible through the generosity of Mary and Michael Jaharis and the Jaharis Family Foundation.

2014
Support for Worship
The Center commissions the artist Andreas Mantzioutas to create a set of liturgical items to be used on campus by the Orthodox Christian Fellowship.

Fall 2015
A Voice in the Public Square
The Center launches Public Orthodoxy, an editorial forum for scholars, priests, and laypeople to comment on issues of contemporary concern in a manner more suited for a broad, non-academic audience.

October 5, 2015
A Second Endowed Chair
George Demacopoulos is installed as the Fr. John Meyendorff & Patterson Family Chair in Orthodox Christian Studies, an endowed position made possible through the generosity of Solon and Marianna Patterson.

2017
Support for Scholars
The Center extends an invitation to Aram G. Sarkisian to become its first Dissertation Completion Fellow. A doctoral candidate at Northwestern University, he uses the fellowship to complete his dissertation, "The Cross Between Hammer and Sickle: Russian Orthodox Christians in Red Scare America, 1908–1924."

Donna Rizk, Ph.D., joins the Center as its first Coptic Orthodox Studies Research Fellow. She spends the year at Fordham conducting research that compares women’s roles in the Coptic and Armenian Orthodox traditions.

March 2018
Orthodoxy and the Promotion of Human Rights
After securing two grants totaling $610,000 from the Luce Foundation and Leadership 100, the Center undertakes a multiyear research project to promote human rights. They collaborate with scholars and journalists to create and disseminate comprehensive analyses of Orthodox Christianity and human rights that can be shared with Orthodox leaders, heads of state, and policymakers around the world.

Spring 2018
A New Academic Journal
The Journal of Orthodox Christian Studies is founded as an initiative of the Center. Published semiannually by Johns Hopkins University Press, the journal is co-edited by George Demacopoulos and Vera Shevzov. “Despite the ancient history of Orthodox Christianity, its study is no antiquarian exercise,” they write in the journal’s first issue.
Fall 2018
Welcoming Faculty Fellows
Maria-Alina Asavei, Ph.D., joins the Center as its first Faculty Research Fellow. She is a lecturer at Charles University’s Institute of International Studies in Prague and the author of Aesthetics, Disinterestedness, and Effectiveness in Political Art (Rowman & Littlefield, 2018).

February 2021
Orthodox Scholars Preach
The Center launches the Orthodox Scholars Preach webinar series in partnership with the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America and with the blessing of His Eminence Archbishop Elpidophoros.

June 2021
An Armenian Connection
Jesse Arlen, a Ph.D. candidate at the University of California, Los Angeles, is named the Center’s first distinguished fellow in Armenian Christian Studies. The fellowship is the result of a new partnership between the Center and the Eastern Diocese of the Armenian Church of America.

January 2019
Texts in Translation
The Center launches its second book series with Fordham University Press. Christian Arabic Texts in Translation is edited by Stephen J. Davis, Ph.D., a professor of history and the Woolsey Professor of Religious Studies at Yale University.

June 2019
Advancing Scholarship and Conversation
Together with the University of Exeter in the United Kingdom, the Center brings together diverging voices from both sides of the Atlantic for a seminar titled “Contemporary Eastern Orthodox Identity and the Challenges of Pluralism and Sexual Diversity in a Secular Age.”

June 2020
Women Scholars of Orthodox Christianity
The Center welcomes three women to serve as distinguished fellows for 2020–2021 and launches Women Scholars of Orthodox Christianity, a webinar series focused on the contributions and scholarship of Orthodox Christian women from across disciplines and jurisdictions.

September 2020
The Economos Lecture Series
The Center’s signature lecture series is renamed the Economos Orthodoxy in America Lecture series in gratitude for Christ and Anastasia Economos’ generous support. Speaking from the University Church, His Eminence Archbishop Elpidophoros of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America delivers a virtual address titled “The Future of Orthodox–Catholic Relations in the U.S.A.”
“Having the Orthodox Center here at Fordham is a gift to the world. It is one of the few places where serious conversations between the Eastern and Western churches take place and take place regularly. They know that we take faith seriously, and they flock to us.”

—Joseph M. McShane, S.J., 32nd President of Fordham University

Celebrating the First Decade
The Center celebrates its 10th anniversary at a reception following “Nicea, Conciliarity, and the Future of Christianity,” the 2022 Patterson Triennial Conference on Christian Unity.
Learning and Lectures

Each year, the Center sponsors a wide range of academic and public events to help build and sustain a community of intellectual inquiry and ecumenical understanding.

Our signature events—the annual Christ and Anastasia Economos Orthodoxy in America Lecture and the Solon and Marianna Patterson Triennial Conference on Orthodox/Catholic Dialogue—feature prominent public speakers and influential thinkers, such as His Eminence Archbishop Elpidophoros of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America and His Grace Bishop Daniel Findikyan, Primate of the Eastern Diocese of the Armenian Apostolic Church.

Throughout the year, the Center also offers public lectures, webinars, conferences, and seminars that bring together members of our academic and ecclesial communities to discuss topics ranging from the role of women scholars in Orthodox Christianity to the relationship between religion and nationalism.

“Our lecture series has become a highly valued and anticipated opportunity for the greatest minds in and around Orthodoxy to share perspectives and insights that are truly unique, impactful, and wonderfully presented. The audiences are growing and they have come to expect to obtain new knowledge, appreciate deeper insights, and to gain a little spiritual inspiration at every lecture.”

—Aris Chicles, Orthodox Christian Studies Advisory Council Member
The Christ and Anastasia Economos Orthodoxy in America Lecture

The Economos Orthodoxy in America Lecture Series is the largest annual lecture on Orthodox Christianity and the only one housed within a university setting. It is also the only one to explore the Orthodox tradition as it intersects with the American religious experience.

Because it is held at Fordham, the Jesuit University of New York, this series provides unparalleled opportunities for advancing ecumenical conversations about issues facing both the Orthodox and Roman Catholic traditions. It is made possible through the generosity of Christ and Anastasia Economos, with additional support provided by the Nicholas J. and Anna K. Bouras Foundation Inc.

“I see the Center and its leaders as bridge builders. They are building bridges between Orthodoxy and Catholicism, clearly, but also beyond that, into the general community.”

—Christ H. Economos, Chair, Orthodox Christian Studies Advisory Council

Webinar Series Extend the Center’s Global Reach

In 2020–2021, the Center launched three webinar series that have attracted viewers from around the world, including university students, professors, seminarians, priests, bishops, laypeople, and others.

The Solon and Marianna Patterson Triennial Conference on Christian Unity

Held every three years, this two–day conference of panels and lectures fosters contemporary conversation on Orthodox and Catholic relations for an international audience. The series premiered in June 2007, with a conference examining the place of St. Augustine in the Orthodox Church and the Latin doctor’s potential to be seen as a bridge between East and West rather than an obstacle to ecumenical understanding. The sixth Patterson Triennial Conference will be held May 31 through June 3, 2022, on the theme “Nicaea, Conciliarity, and the Future of Christianity.”

Past Patterson Triennial Conferences

2019: “Faith, Reason, Theosis”
2016: “Tradition, Secularization, Fundamentalism”
2013: “Christianity, Democracy, and the Shadow of Constantine”
2010: “Orthodox Constructions of the West”
2007: “Orthodox Readings of Augustine”

The Patterson Triennial Conference is made possible through the generosity of Solon and Marianna Patterson.

After the launch of Women Scholars of Orthodox Christianity, the Center’s YouTube channel had a 500% increase in global viewership to 70,000.
Women Scholars of Orthodox Christianity focuses on the contributions and scholarship of Orthodox women from across disciplines and jurisdictions. The series, launched in 2020, is funded by annual support from an anonymous donor and has brought greater awareness not only to the Center but also to the incredible work and experiences of these women, which include professors, diplomats, and theologians.

Orthodox Scholars Preach, launched in February 2021, provides a space for Orthodox scholars and others interested in Orthodox spirituality to encounter the depth and richness of the tradition through stimulating, theologically informed discussion and teachings. The series is produced in partnership with the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America.

The Geopolitical Event series draws on the broad geographic reach of Orthodoxy, this series highlights topics important to Orthodox communities around the globe and emphasizes timely analysis. In fall 2021, for example, the Center held a webinar titled “The Migrant Crisis and the Orthodox Church in Belarus” and launched a book talk series devoted to all things Russia, hosted by Michael Ossorgin, Ph.D., director of the Russian program and advanced lecturer in Russian at Fordham University. More recently, following the Russian invasion of Ukraine, the Center convened a panel discussion titled “Religion, Russia, Ukraine.”

“The Center has without question established itself as a leading light for Orthodoxy today: for scholarship, theology, politics, and cultural issues; for conversation, dialogue, and fearless consideration of the future. It is a beacon of hope.

“The series on Women Scholars of Orthodox Christianity has been a game changer. The sheer breadth of scholarship has been noteworthy: across academic disciplines, time periods, geographical regions, methodologies, and with a truly international slate of guests. It is profoundly heartening to see the importance of women’s contributions to the study of Orthodoxy.”

—Susan Ashbrook Harvey, Ph.D., Professor of Religious Studies, Brown University

“The Orthodox Christian Studies Center is a unique and remarkable endeavor, providing not only scholarships and resources for those interested in pursuing further studies into all aspects of Orthodox theology and culture, but through their lecture series and the Public Orthodoxy website, facilitating an open space for serious, insightful, courteous, critical (in the proper sense of that word), and critically important discussion. There is nothing quite like it, and for this we are profoundly grateful.”

—The Very Rev. Dr. John Behr, Father Georges Florovsky Distinguished Professor of Patristics, St. Vladimir’s Orthodox Theological Seminary

Through its commitment to probing scholarship and open dialogue, the Orthodox Christian Studies Center has engaged a dynamic, multigenerational audience since 2012, and become a trusted source for learners around the world.

As we enter our second decade, we believe in the Center’s extraordinary potential to bring the resources of academic research and insight to more Orthodox Christian parishes throughout the United States and to an even broader global public.

As part of Cura Personalis | For Every Fordham Student, the University’s fundraising campaign to enhance the entire student experience, we have launched our own $5 million campaign to create a permanent home for the Center in Loyola Hall on Fordham’s Rose Hill campus and a permanent research endowment for Orthodox Christian studies.

By continuing to educate students and support the world’s leading minds in this discipline, we will extend understanding of the history, thought, and culture of Orthodox Christianity—and how it can be harnessed to respond to some of the world’s greatest challenges.

We are deeply thankful to the countless students, faculty, visiting scholars, guests, and benefactors who have contributed their time, talent, and financial support to help make the Center what it is today. We look forward to your continued loyalty as we advance our mission into the next decade and beyond, fostering greater understanding and developing a deeper sense of community both near and far.

“We started off with high expectations about the Center, but they’ve really exceeded our hopes and accomplished so much in this first decade. This has been an exciting project for us to watch grow and come to where it is today. We think the future for the Center is tremendous, and we’re excited for what’s to come.”
